I always take a shower in the morning.

We sometimes eat pizza for dinner.

Chris never calls me. He always texts.

If the main verb of a sentence is be, adverbs of frequency go after it:

It s always windy in this area.

Three Kinds of Verbs

1. Auxiliary Verbs: Be, Do, Have

These are used to change tenses or to make questions and negative sentences. Many teachers and students call auxiliary verbs "helping verbs" because they help the main verb of a sentence.

I don't like traveling to cold countries.

He has already seen the movie.

Are they leaving now?

Auxiliary Verbs: Can, Will, May, Should, etc.

The auxiliary verbs be, do, and have because they help a main verb in a sentence. They are different from the main verbs which have a special meaning.

In the following sentences, may means maybe, can't means impossible or unable, and should is asking for advice:
